For more than 41 years, the Burleson Public Library has served the library needs of the community. That dedication was recognized April 2 when the Burleson City Council proclaimed the week of April 8-14 as National Library Week in Burleson.

First sponsored in 1958, National Library Week is a national observance sponsored by the American Library Association and libraries across the country each April.

The library offers something for everyone, whether you are a job seeker looking for resources to land a new job, a parent looking for free activities for children or a student searching for your next favorite book. The Burleson Public Library offers computer and English as a Second Language classes for adults; children's programs; teen programs; wireless internet; electronic resources; an interlibrary loan program; and E-readers. Library cards are issued at no charge if you live in or own property within the city limits of Burleson.

The Burleson Public Library and Hill College at Burleson also partner to expand the community's higher education opportunities. With 2012 being the City's Centennial year, the Burleson Public Library Advisory Board, Friends of the Burleson Public Library, and the staff, volunteers and supporters of the library are celebrating not only National Library Week, but also the Centennial of the City of Burleson.
